Step 3: Practice of Nasal Cleansing

*Best to practice over sink or basin to catch the water and mucus

*Tilt your head to one side

*Insert nozzle of nasal pot into upper nostril

*Slowly raise pot to start water flow

TIP: the water flow will work best once you achieve the correct angle of the head. Most people find that the head should be tipped slightly forward and to the side so that your lower eye can see the sink drain or bottom of basin out of the corner of the eye.

*It may take a few seconds for water flow to start. Once you achieve the correct angle it will flow steadily with the water flowing in the “upper” nostril and out the lower nostril.

*While practicing nasal cleansing continue to breathe easily through your mouth.

Note: the water will flow easily without going down your throat. If you notice any water trying to go into your mouth or throat, tilt head slightly more forward.

*after completing one side, reverse the tilt of the head and do it through the other nostril.

*Some people use half a pot per side. Others a full pot per side.

 - *once you get used to it, the entire process only takes a couple of minutes to complete. Most people combine it with daily oral hygiene practices either morning or evening.
